Guidance for completing applications for Iolanthe Midwives Awards

Introduction to the Midwives Awards

The Iolanthe Midwives Awards help recipients with the cost of professional education or projects that help to improve midwifery care and practice. You will need to show in your application that your proposed plan will lead to improvements in care through practice, education and training or research.

What type of projects and research are suitable?

Awards are made to help midwives with the costs of self-development or training, to undertake research or to make improvements to local services.

This could include:

- Developing services for pregnant women/individuals or new mothers/parents and/or babies in a local hospital or in the community
- Organising study days for local midwives
- Training courses to develop specialist skills to use in your midwifery practice.
- Conference entry fee and travel to conferences, either as an attendee or to present research findings on good midwifery practice. Please note that due to the global Covid-19 pandemic, we are not funding travel abroad in this round of awards.
- Assistance with academic fees for Masters and PhD studies

Each application will be judged on its individual merits. See below for a guide to writing a good application.

You can apply for more than one award, for instance a Midwives Award and the Jean Davies Award. You may do this for the same project or for different projects. However, we advise that you think carefully about the nature of your project and about the amount you wish to apply for before making multiple applications. Please tailor your applications to be appropriate for each award.

A Guide to Writing a Good Application

	What goes wrong?	What you can do to give yourself a better chance of funding
The purpose of the application	Giving too little information about your proposed project or just copying information from elsewhere (eg academic course objectives)	Clearly justify your choice of project and tell us what makes it worthwhile or innovative. Identify how this will benefit the wellbeing of mothers/parents and/or babies. Projects which address health inequalities for ethnic communities or target vulnerable groups are also viewed more positively.
Benefits from the project	Not giving enough thought about how you, your employer, the midwifery profession, maternity services and women/families will benefit.	Spell out the benefits of your project to yourself and others (parents and babies, other midwives, and the profession and/or employer). Explain how you will share your experience or the knowledge that you gain.
Costs	Including excessive, irrelevant or personal costs Not being clear in your project description about what the money will be spent on	Give detailed well-researched costs with a brief justification for why these are included. Include precise details on what the money will be spent on in the section describing your project. Don't include personal costs which you are not expecting to get funded (e.g. holiday excursion). Provide evidence of other fundraising – we view this positively as a sign of commitment.
The overall quality of the application	Missing out sections and applications which are too long and unfocused. Applications which don't convey conviction or interest.	Make sure your application is complete, well presented and readable. Use the word counts to help focus the information. Reference your application with research or policy if appropriate but not excessively. Write with feeling and persuasion.
Support and commitment.	Not enough evidence of support to do the project.	Include a supporting letter from your manager/academic lead/course tutor. If possible, ask for a personal reference rather than a standard letter. Acknowledge other support, eg time off or part-funding. Please ensure you give those people providing a supporting letter enough notice. Supporting information cannot be added after the application deadline.
